I will put my ass on the line. Somebody close to a distribution centre leave a tractor and trailer conveniently loaded with fym with the keys in and I will "steal it". The deal is give me enough time to get close before phoning it in and then refuse to press charges due to it not being damaged

You make the mistake of believing public support gets you anything reversed with government politicians, unavoidable ongoing pressure on government is all that results in climb downs & reversals.

politicians need public support to get elected things are going to get very embarrassing for labour come local elections and and by elections, CV scandals, rising unemployment and horrific cost of living crisis/ looming deep recession and devaluation of pension, investments and currency leaders and minsters WILL change (as they always do). New leaders and ministers often change policies to stamp their authority public opinion is very media led - media are onside and as a result so is public, this government was elected on a small vote than lost corbyn's election, there were never popular and have become a LOT less popular since gaining power this is as much as we can do without the kind of action that will put you in prison.

All hot air guys. As before forget taking Joe public with you. Name me any strike in last 40 years that did that and won. The train and tube drivers won 69k a year for a four day week. They inconvenienced millions including MP s so the mps got a double dose. Couldn't commute easily and oodles of constituents giving them grief.

Target roads around distribution centres far enough away to negate morrisons injunctions. As soon as you shout shortages the vultures will empty the shelves within 24 hours and within 48 hours Rachel from accounts will back down. Stop being nice it hasn't worked in the last 50 years and won't now.

And ban sludge and see the public and journalists kick up hell with the government. They won't blame the farmers. It'll be the government they'll bring down.

Fine do it as well, use all the levers we possess, my suggestion builds more pressure the longer it goes on with summer & warmer weather approaching & it doesn't interfere with farming.

The fuel blockade worked not really because of how effective it was but because of the panic buying. That's the way we could still force their hand with distribution centres (especially now Morrisons lawyers have drawn us a load of great maps* 🤔🤔🤔)- the panic would spread as people worried about not having food to shove into their gobs.

I'm not sure they worry about what happens to it afterwards 🤔🤔🤔

*Hi Morrisons Lawyers and MI5 counter terrorism unit- I'm joking of course 😊

What you need to understand about the London tractor protest in particular Brian is that, all day long last time, from 5 in the morning in Reading until about 6pm coming back through Slough- we had people pointing camera phones at us in amazement and filming you going past. No joke. People stopping on the pavement and filming for minutes at a time.

The engagement on that day was HUGE. Added to the thousands of drivers tooting and waving as well- the reach was enormous. It was a viral-marketing managers wet dream.

The videos are still spreading around the internet now racking up tens of thousands of views.

I think farm leaders need to engage with the haulage bods as first port of call, get them on board. We need to have empty shelves.

I mentioned this at the very first FTA, meeting, if we get them involved it all gets easier but alot of owner drivers won't be interested and the big guys worried about breaking contracts and becoming obsolete.

I have posted this a few times.

If farmers A C and E are at the other side of town to farmers B D and F.

At around the same time same day farmer A drives his tractor to farmer B to borrow an implement. Farmer B drives his tractor to farmer C to borrow an implement. Farmer C drives his tractor to farmer D to borrow an implement. And so on. Not illegal, I suppose it can be done on red diesel, and if you all coincidentally happen to be on the road at the same time (?)

Also what about flying pickets. We don't need to have 100 s tractors at a distribution centre just 8 or ten like at MK but with a couple of hundred bodies to assist. No excuse then about too far to travel on a tractor. 🙌

Well they do seem to be extremely confident that RT will continue without much change. I wonder how long she will be there.

It's a bit worrying that, when it finds itself as deeply in the 'mire' as it is, the primary response of RT is to find a new communications expert.

I'm sure that she's very good at her job, but what farming needs now is fundamental and permanent change at RT. What we don't need is to be communicated at better.

The only benefit she can try to sell to farmers is market access or what Minette Batters called the 'licence to farm'. Thing is, everyone had full market access before RT came along.

Ah, but it gives consumers confidence that their food is produced to high standards? Well not really, when our stuff is mixed with foreign produce with no documentation other than a single lab analysis of the ship's cargo. Plus it may have been sprayed with chemicals banned in the UK.

my various RT and AHDB moles are NOT filling me with confidence right now that management and governance are taking this as seriously as they should !!!!

It won't take many to block a food distribution centre. If it can be successfully coordinated mass resignation of RT would be another way to go. However if it was written in law then we couldn't possibly get back to the position we are in now. They won't listen or change significantly because Moseley and co know they will be on the dole. The only reason they keep dreaming up new farm assurance standards is because farmers are morally and illegally coerced into assurance scheme. I can only see farmers having to force change so farmers can sell non-assured UK standard food, the buyer must legally accept non-assured food, illegal for buyer to coerce farmers into assurance scheme food, and farmer has legal right to reject premium for assured food and buyer therefore must buy non-assured food.

Or is it a vehicle that govt can use to police their green policies?

Minette Batters says they won't pay a premium so forget about that. It's probably the rest you mentioned plus Moseley and co can parasitically feed off their host the farmer.

The only chance of a premium is when the farmer has choice to reject joining an assurance scheme and therefore reject a premium offered for assurance and therefore buyer must purchase non-assured food. Its fantasy land as they won't pay a worthwhile premium for the majority of farmers and once it's written in law that's the finish of Moseley and co and they know it. To get it written in law potent tools at our disposal such as blocking food distribution centres will bring it about. Diplomacy first with supermarkets and government before forcing change if they are corrupt and disagree to write it in law. Until then Moseley and co will continue as a criminal organisation.

Exactly, they don't want p45s , it's farmers that have to fight and force change because Moseley and co and buyers are happy to wilfully and knowingly obtain money imorally and illegally for years to come from farmers.

Without legal advice its common sense it's immoral and illegal for AIC UFAS Mills to reject UK non-farm assured grain and demand UK farm assured grain yet allow negligent standards of imported non-farm assured grain. Its also common sense it's immoral and illegal for any buyer of UK food to reject UK non-farm assured food and demand UK farm assured food yet buy the same negligent non-farm assured imported food. In fact I would argue its immoral and illegal for any buyer who doesn't buy imported food, to coerce UK farmer into an assurance scheme by rejecting non-farm assured food and demanding farm assured foods unless sufficient premium is offered to the farmer to sell farm assured food. Of course the farmer must have the legal right to reject the premium offered. Legal advice has been taken and indicates it is illegal and immoral.

Therefore I'm saying Moseley and co, buyers such as supermarkets and the government are corrupt if after diplomacy they disagree. Therefore if they choose corruption we farmers know we are on the right side of justice, morally and legally, we have every right to fight and force change with food distribution blockades and other potent tools at our disposal in order to have it rightfully written in law.

So with that profit how does it pay inheritance tax...

And they've probably not been putting any investment into maintaining their buildings and infrastructure as that 27k was needed to live on. Thirty years ago those same farms would have been looked after to a different standard so the profit figures quoted above don't really stand up.

That letter wouldn't have been written if you hadn't blocked Morrisons' rdc, had protests etc. You should take it as a positive, being that most, if not all (I can't be arsed to check) of those mp's would have voted against the Tories in November on the apr issue. You are possibly being heard - stick at it Supermarkets and government wake up when you block food distribution centres and if the supermarkets and government aren't corrupt they agree with what is morally and legally right. If supermarkets and government are corrupt then it won't take many further blockades to force change.

The French farmers have a lot more public support . There are 708,000 farmers in France out of 68 million people there are 108,000 farmers in UK out of 68 million people. The French have a much greater connection and understanding of farming. Set fire to something in France and they'll all have a laugh do it in England you're going to jail for a long time.

Lots about this and Isabell oakshott knows things aswell but think they are all frightened of prison as any normal person would be.clues everywhere on YouTube.there has been commentators on there having their accounts removed,the Preston journalist being one of them.he soo came back under a differant name but takes ages to get subscribers again.so much for free speech whats happened to freedom of speech , this isnt bloody russia.

stalin starmer should fk off to russia.

There are plenty of other ways and places to protest
They will find it very hard to ban every farmer because there is no one single organisation or company to serve injunctions on
If they pick on any individual of group another will fill it's place
There are 10 of thousands of address with farm in the name many not owned by farmers even the supermarkets have brands with farm in the name

How's it going so far 4 months in? Clive said the battle is already lost

These type of protests take more than 5 minutes,,,,,,,,,,,,,months into years, April 25 to April 26 will have meaning with effect

We need an independent team of forensic accountants to go through all accounts over the last 5 years (to start with) in a fully open way, then we can start to strip assets off those that have stolen taxpayer monies. We also need an open investigation into EVERY politicians accounts which should include family members that were given any contracts using taxpayer money.

The tractors are mobilising...

But who? And why?

Farmers are saying NO to Labour's direction for Britain.

Will you stand with them?

THE TRACTORS ARE MOBILISING!

LABOUR IS BREAKING BRITAIN!
- WE'RE STILL SAYING "NO!" - WILL YOU?

The Farming... @TheFarmin... · Apr 3

Everyone has to play their part in educating this government and the public in all matters that impact our industry. We fully support our fantastic industry and the public's right to food security, environment enhancement and a heritage that spans generations.

farmersweekly 🚗 Farmers To Action has pledged to continue its campaign until the proposed farm tax is scrapped or significantly altered.

Alan Hughes, a fourth-generation tenant farmer from the Shropshire/Herefordshire border at Leintwardine, who owns 26ha of land, says IHT will devastate his family farm.

He urged farmers to get involved to show their opposition to Labour's IHT plans.

"Get on to the Farmers To Action socials, Facebook, Instagram, TikTok and X and see where your nearest action is to you and join in," Mr Hughes said.

"Now is the time to stand up to this Labour government and say 'enough is enough' before it's too late.

"We have to get this sorted by November, otherwise this will start to take effect by April," he explained.

"This is our last chance, so we need to step up, stand up and push hard against Labour before it's too late."
